Here is one of the most insightful texts on the subtle arts of confrontation and victory to emerge from Asian culture. Interesting, but I think at this point the teachings have been so frequently adapted that some of this felt very 'common sense'.

The attitude of "Existing-NonExisting", mixes the Five Attitudes with the Aikido principle of "To Release Four Hands. To Hold Down a Pillow. In the above quote, Musashi speaks of "virtue and no evil".

To train in Kendo one must subjugate the self, bear the pain of gruelling practice. A few years of this revival the fierce Ainu, the aboriginal inhabitants of Japan who had until then confounded the army's attempt to move them from their wild lodgings, were driven far off to the northern island, Hokkaido. However you hold the sword it must be in such a way that it is easy to cut the enemy well, in accordance with the situation, the place, and your relation to the enemy.
