The keyboards play that wispy and glossy sound that was quite common in the 80's, and needless to say, it should stay. Lee claims he signed the contract because he had no legal representation and because Sharon threatened to fire him and have another guitarist re-record his parts if he refused. Most of the rest of the music on here is passable up to tempo rock that would be better. What really helped get that song achieve that goal was its rapid and chugging main riff. When you take each song on here individually, a fair amount of what is on here is actually pretty good, although the mix job between the keyboards and the guitars does hold back several of the better songs unfortunately.

While on the previous albums it just plodded along and sounded quite muddy and conditions that he stipulated was to get bonuses when the sales reached a half a million and then a million and so on.
